(3) Changes in Population

Oita Prefecture’s population has continued to fall since it peaked at 1,277,000 people in 1955. By 1970 the population had fallen to 1,155,000 people, but there was a trend of population growth later, and in 1985 the population was 1,250,000. However, from 1985 onwards, there has been a continued trend of population decrease in Oita due to factors such as the concentration of people in the Tokyo area and a declining population. In 2020, there were 1,123,000 people in Oita. This is the biggest rate of population decline in the prefecture since 1965.

Total Population and the Rate of Population Change

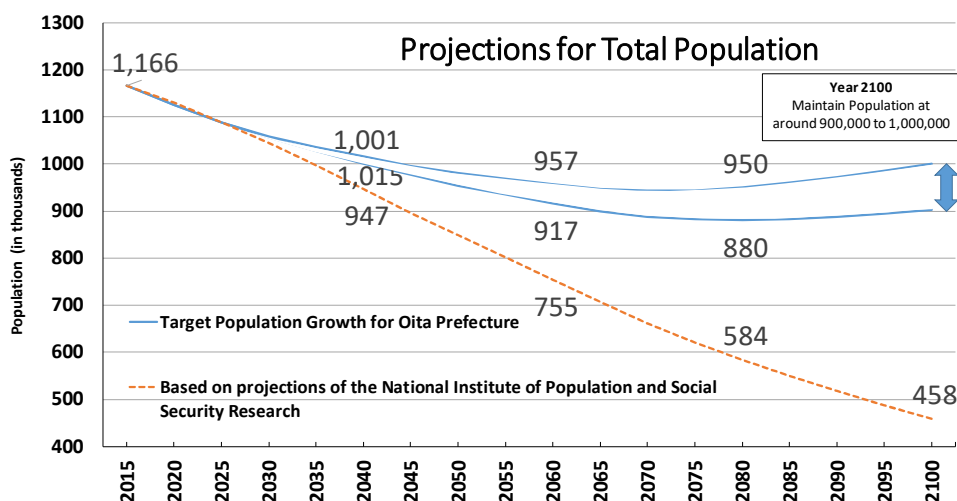

(4) Future Population Estimates

Oita’s population will likely face continued decline if no further action is taken, estimated to drop to 458,000 by year 2100.

On the other hand, if the prefecture meets the expectations of residents by providing support in areas such as marriage, childbirth and child care in conjunction to encouraging long-term residence among the younger generations, the population is projected to remain at around 900,000~1,000,000 in year 2100 through natural growth.

Regional revitalization is a key component to maintaining Oita’s population. In particular, it is crucial that the prefecture fulfils the following objectives concerning total fertility rate, number of births and social increase of the population.

Total fertility rate 1.83 by year 2025	Number of births approx. 9,000 by year 2025	Social increase remain at equilibrium by year 2025

(7) The History of Oita Prefecture

In olden days, Oita Prefecture was called Toyo Province and was separated into two provinces called Bunzen and Bungo at the end of the 7th century.

In the 8th century, Usa Hachimangu prospered as the head shrine of the 40,000 Hachiman shrines in the country. Furthermore, a unique Buddhist culture called "Rokugo-manzan" blossomed on the Kunisaki Peninsula.

At the beginning of the 13th century (the Kamakura period), the Otomo clan entered the province in order to protect it and subsequently reigned for a period of 400 years. During the period of Sourin Otomo in particular, the Otomo clan had dominion over six provinces in northern Kyushu, including Bunzen. As a Christian daimyo (Japanese feudal lord), Sourin Otomo was very proactive in introducing Christianity and Western culture. Chinese ships and Portuguese ships entered the Funai Domain (modern day Oita Prefecture) in Usuki, "Nanban Trade" occurred in full swing, and Usuki prospered as an international city.

Under Hideyoshi Toyotomi, the Otomo clan was forcibly relocated at the end of the 16th century, and the feudal domain became extremely divided. During the 300 years that followed, the age of small feudal domains separating from each other continued, and as the culture of castle towns blossomed all throughout the prefecture, the spirit of autonomy and independence rose and brought forth talented people filled with individuality.

With the arrival of the Meiji Era, major prefectural reform was pushed, and Bungo Province became Oita Prefecture and Bunzen Province became Kokura Prefecture.

Afterwards, prefectural reorganization occurred, and both the districts of Shimoge and Usa became incorporated into Oita Prefecture, thereby giving us today's prefectural territory.
